

Seeing Red

On Louisiana streets, a red jacket might be the sign of a new service organization on the block

Baton Rouge, La.

January 2006

James Fox-Smith

The army, Louisiana National Guard, FEMA: in recent months there have been plenty of people in uniform to be seen in Louisiana's hurricane-affected cities and towns. They represent different agencies and agendas, but one group recognizable by their scarlet jackets are in Louisiana to model a different sort of national service, and they're doing everything they can to stand out from the crowd.